Hurricane Song is a beautifully written book of hope. Doc never gives up hope that the clubs, symbols of New Orleans music and soul, are spared and that his apartment above the Pharaoh club is in tact. The funeral march around the Superdome for an evacuee who died, including the initial slow dirges morphing into livelier songs which accompany the spirit to its final rest, depict the importance ...

Author's Notes for Hurricane Song: What inspired you to write this book? I was watching the news coverage when a local musician gave his account of braving the conditions in the street to see what had happened to a favorite jazz club in which he regularly played. I was so incredibly moved by his feelings for that patch of ground that the wheels of a storyline began turning in my head ...
