The glass painters daughter is Rachel Hore's third book. Fran Morrison's returns home after a phone call telling her that her father has suffered a stroke. Fran and her father have over the last decade have had an uneasy relationship. Her father owns Minster Glass in Westminster which Fran when younger worked. Fran takes her place in her fathers shop alongside Zac. They accept a commission to restore a shattered glass picture of an angel. Alongside this story Fran uncovers a diary written to Car

After reading most of Rachel Hore's novels I make sure I keep up with her work. I would compare her to Susanna Kearsley and Kate Morton--both are at the top of my author-list. The operation of Minster Glass is unexpectedly passed on to Fran Morrison while her father is in the hospital. She returns to London and assists her father's employee, Zac, in keeping the glass painting business alive. While going through her father's files, Fran unearths a journal kept more than one hundred ...

Rachel Hore's books always give me an overall good feeling and I look forward to reading more of her books. The book, at times, lagged a bit but overall the book was very good. I enjoyed the different characters, even those that I did not particularly like. The book had a good flow between the past and the present. I love historical pieces like this and I found the glass painting aspect very ...
